KNOWLEDGE WORKER:

PETER POLNER

SELF PORTRAIT OF STRENGTHS:

I am a diligent Hungarian student; others see me as an empathetic soul and an analytical person. Through this I use caring prudence to place my best work forward. I am open to learn new ways of doing things, which I often use to improve my technical ability. I want to use these capabilities to create a better governed world, which I see as a place filled with cooperation a value that I want to take advantage of as much as possible. I want to evolve myself and my environment to achieve new levels of advancement. Working along with others creates and ever improving cycle, which is an environment that I highly thrive in. respecting others and being tolerant of their principles is at the core of my values, which others recognize and connect with adding to my personal cooperation cycle. My background is important to me, and I use it to support my values.

PERFORMANCE ANALYSIS:

I felt that I performed the best when I worked on my history final project; I kept organized and carried out my research independently. I shared information with an associate of mine who was working on a similar topic, which led to them reviewing the design of my presentation, improving both of our projects in the end. The deadline and the strong weight of the assignment led to me focusing on completing it and generating my best work, without this my presentation would have been flimsy and unflattering. Being efficient created an opportunity to work on skills that I know need work, in this example I used most of my time improving my presentation skills making me a better public speaker. When I bring myself to focus heavily on my task, I can create my most impressive and creative works, this would be totally impossible without some aspect of motivation, target, or help from others

CULTURAL RETROSPECTIVE:

I strongly identify with my Hungarian heritage, I feel connected to my roots through my family, culture, and most importantly language. This has helped me to connect with people from across the world. It is important for me to retain my favorite parts of the culture, so that it will eventually evolve past me and onto others and my future family. I feel it important to know and recognize history and to celebrate the losses and triumphs of a people and use it to look ahead to the future. I would like to forget the weak national work ethic that is instilled within us Hungarians in our every aspect of life; it is pivotal to value that if you do not place effort into the things you do, you will be inept at changing anything about your situation. I hope to preserve the Hungarian culture and I seek to improve and change it, by keeping and celebrating traditions local to our people.

LEARNING STYLE

I am a lifelong learner due to my tolerance, to things outside of my own personal bubble. Being able to see various viewpoints helped me immensely; this is best exemplified by my intro to business class, where I was able to distinguish the benefits of diverse types of economic systems, this led me to engage in discussions with classmates creating learning opportunities for both of us. My understanding of topics is heavily influenced by my notetaking abilities, which forces me to condense large concepts into simple bullets points which I can easily interpret. This has shown me that when I can understand things better i get more satisfaction from learning (seems so simple in retrospect). Since then, I have grown to attempt learning new things whenever possible directing me to new opportunities which I never would have thought to be possible. My ability to appreciate others and condense information makes me an adaptable creature in today's everchanging world.

VALUES

I believe that my values align with the concept of "doing the right thing even when no one is looking". Accordingly, the VIA Survey listed my top five values are prudence, honesty, hope, teamwork, and fairness; these values strongly reflect the way I think and interact with others, especially "thinking before speaking" and being respectful of others. Other people that I surveyed about my values seemed to agree they saw me as empathetic, reflecting on my skills relating to people (teamwork and fairness) as well as being organized and well communicated reflecting on prudence, having well thought out plan and recognizing any impact on others. I hone my values often, especially when contributing to a team or when sharing my opinion, and this improves my perspective of the world every single day. Overall, I align myself with these values because being respectful and being recognizing of others feels like a large part of me and how I look at the world.

WORK ENVIORNMENT

My ideal job situation would entail working outside of a hierarchical structure, considering I am positioning myself to enter the field of economics, this would be a perfect environment. Why? Because rather than having a concrete reporting structure (i.e., boss or manager) I work best when I collaborate with others on the same level, because this way you are able to debate and use the scientific method to arrive to a better plan or solution. This would work if my peers were similarly educated and from a different background than me, contributing to a diverse work environment. This all hints to research-based work and discovering facts, a task that is improved by this dynamic work arrangement. I am not stating that we should absolutely remove all forms of managers from my desired work environment, because they are important, having someone more tenured oversee work could be a useful aid. This could be further enhanced by a further network of experts outside of our company or field, which could contribute further to our workflow.

CONTRIBUTIONS

I want to contribute to order in this world, I don't exactly know what system works the best but I would like to create an environment where said discourse could take place. I could achieve this by working for governing organizations whether it is work for the US government/EU institutions, or international and non-government organizations such as the UN. Governance has always played a role in my life and being involved with it professionally would be a perfect mix of interest. I see protecting rule of law and democracy as a necessary component to cooperate on global issues, removing mistrust and ill intent between people is the only way to cooperate effectively. Democratic systems create a national environment that can be proud of itself and recognize others, in a way not seen before by humanity. These ideas are why I want to use my skills and knowledge to further global goals and by proxy improve the world standard.
